fortnight, a week or a day. They know that hundreds make this practically their winter home, coming singly and in families and staying straight through until spring, just as people go to the shore or the mountains in the summer and stay straight through until fall.

They know all this and vet they cannot quite grasp it and understand it. It all seems so bewildering.

And so it is bewildering. That is just about the word that fits the case. If in the winter of 1800-91 you had made the prediction that in the winter of 1901-02 there would be in full swing at Atlantic City ten great hotels, hotels of the highest type and representing millions of investigations. type and representing millions of invest-ment the person to whom you made that prediction would have doubted your sanity. Had you added to this the statement that these same hotels would be swarming with guests and making money he would not have had the remotest doubt as to your sanity. It would only have been a question with him as to the advisability of a straitjacket.

And yet those ten great hotels with their brilliant corridors all astir with animation and bright with pretty faces of gay attire, are just as much a solid, in controvertible fact in this same winter of 1901-92 as is the surf of the broad Atlantic that is thrashing in front of their doors. And even with thet only a part is told.

in front of their doors. And even with that only a part is told.

There are others—hotels, that is. It is not absolutely necessary that a hotel be big enough to hold a village and that the length of its corridors be computed by the mile to be still a hotel.

Besides the ten just mentioned, there are—Oh well, never mind how many, but a lot of other smaller hotels capable of accommodating thirty or forty people each. And these, too, are open and doing business with their proprietors accepting their fate as though it were not so bad after all. They are not complaining.

But with all this the full winter season is not on yet by a good deal. December

But with all this the full winter season is not on yet by a good deal. December and January are good months at Atlantic City, but it is not until this present month of February that the big resort of Absecon Island is at its full winter high tide.

Several of the largest hotels hold off until this month before they open. From now on until Easter Sunday, when the board walk will be so thronged you hardly can make your way along it, there will be a constantly growing volume of winter visitors here.

one of the big hotels that opened its doors before the 1st of June, while most of them held off, as is still the case with those of other Northern seashore resorts, until the 15th of that month. Thus, it will be seen, bewildering is hardly too broad a word cover a development so singular and rapid as this.

There is hardly another word that will to. If those who only know Atlantic City in number and can think of Atlantic City only as a summer resort doubt this, let them come and see for themselves. If they be not superior to all bewilderment, bewildered they will be.

bewildered they will be.
And what is the cause of all this? On what was this marvelous expansion of a reat summer seashore resort into a great

Here, originally, was a bleak strip of and, an bregularly shaped sand island, f you please, separated from the mainland by a winding and narrow little estuary—sand island on a Northern seashore. With Philadelphia's great population having it for about the nearest open seasons. having it for about the mearest open sea front, it is not at all surprising that it be-came an attractive place for city folice to go to in the hot months; not surprising that the sandbur became a evaruing summer enty—that great holds grew up there and that around the hotels and all along the shore away from them clustered the usual micre away from them clintered the usual groups of seashore cottages. It was as inevitable that Atlantic City should become a summer resort as it was that Philadelphia should grow to be a big city. But why a winter resort?

Was it by reasoning from premises of attractive fact, or was by sheer precesse of attractive fact, or was but there of thousands of people have become convinced that the way to means climatic rigors is to go and air themselves in front of the Atlantic Ground in the deriver count in indevinter?

But it sounded to the ear like a formidable proposition. A winter seashore resort on a Northern coast! At first blush there was a distinct reminder of the absurdity of "Chicago as a Summer Resort" in the bare proposition.

Of all things in the world the Northern seashore was associated with summer. The grooves of thought, the habits of association for generations were to be overcome at the outset.

But the grooves of thought and the habits of association began with a certain number of people to change of themselves before the hotel keepers seriously took them in hand to extend the change on broad and sweeping lines. Atlantic City had become a place of a large permanent population. It is now a city of 30,000 inhabitants, irrespective of the strangers within the gates.

The number of the holdovers among the summer visitors grew every year larger.

summer visitors grew every year larger and larger. There was demand for winter boarding places. The number of over Sunday visitors from Philadelphia was on the increase.

Some of the hotels from the start had, of course, in a town so large, kept open all the year around. The number of their winter guests grew larger and larger.
All this went to show, what all the actual residents there knew, that Atlantic City had distinct and positive attractions for winter residence. The question was whether, in view of the general public habits of thought concerning the seasone as a place for summer recreation, enough peo-ple with an abundance of means to live as pie with an abundance of means to live as they chose could be brought within the influence of these attractions as to put them on such a basis as would warrant the big hotels in opening their doors in winter as well as in summer.

At last there arose a Moses from among the proprietors of the bigger, purely summer hotels to make a lead out into the wilderness. That was eight years ago.

His experience at first went far to justify the timidity of the others. With a house big enough to accomodate 300 or 400 people, there was one occasion during his first winter when he had just two guests in it.

But he had the courage of his faith in Atlantic City's winter attractions and he held the fort. When the turning point came it came with a rush.

make your way along it, there will be a constantly growing volume of winter visitors here.

And this in a place where ten years ago, with the well-dressed throngs that delight with the well-dressed throngs that delight to pened its doors the modern hotel proprietor's heart. The doors of other hotels, one after another were flung open with a bang, and so on and on it went until probably by another winter—unless some blight of hard times falls upon the country—every one of the great hotels in the group known as first class, those which charge the highest prices and which are sixteen in number, will be open in winter as well as in summer.

With the majority of these first-class houses the season is ten months out of the houses the season is ten months out of the twelve. For a variety of reasons business in October and November fails off, and the hotel proprietors take advantage of this fact to close down for an annual over hauting.

A marked feature of Atlantic City's population is the increasing number of New Yorkers. For a time the Philadel-phians were so greatly in preponderance that the rest comparatively were nowhere. But all this is very swiftly changing. There are from Atlantic City four specials each way to and from New York every day.

Perhaps there is just a suspicion of being trundled in a baby carriage on the public highway when you make your first trip in one. But you soon get over that when you get into the procession of hundreds of them and take your push along with the rest. Besides, they are a great boon for fat men, let alone women and those who are frail in health.

But winter life in Atlantic City is by no means all pedestrianism, perambulators and hotel corridors. The piers are open; there is the casino; good vaudeville companies along the board walk; all sorts of hops and gay functions in the hotels; fine salling in cosy-cabined catboats and sloops up at the inlet, and a golf club with links that have a wide fame.

Serenity, restfulness and faces rosy with health in the strong pure ocean air—these are the dominant impressions you carry away with you from Atlantic City in winter.
